“ I’ll have to explain the photos of him in the water. We were out playing a round of disc golf and I lost my disc in the pond. Brad, being Brad, didn’t hesitate—he kicked off his shoes and went in barefoot to try and find it. That’s just the kind of guy he was—always willing to help, always doing something unexpected with a big heart behind it. We never did find my disc, but he pulled two others out of the water and laughed the whole time.

That’s how I’ll remember him. His heart, his humor, and his fearless, fun-loving spirit. I’ll never forget tornado chasing with him, all the shows we went to or star gazing and talking about music. My kids will always remember him as Uncle Brad.

The world feels just a little darker now without your smile, your laughter, and your presence. We miss you, Brad. Love you forever bud.

“ This is unreal. I’ll always cherish the time he snuck me in through his window in high school to introduce me to a new (now still-favorite) TB series that he had on DVD. He was so fun and compassionate. And he’d randomly every few years into our adulthood, send over a new artist or song recommendation and just keep touch in such a simple friendly way. I just know he was doing that with countless other friends from times past, to pass on a quick smile and between the lines it let folks know they had been important at some point in Brad’s eyes.
