“ A mothers poem.

I know it's never easy to lose someone you love. There is never a perfect moment to say goodbye. Your mother was with you all your life and no other person in the world was there for you with such fight. So when you miss her so much your heart aches inside, I wish for you to just close your eyes.

In silence she will be there with you as you were with her, that last moment of her plight. She will forever love you, as you were always precious in her sight.

And in the soft breeze you will feel her touch, knowing that she loved you so much.

The touch that you feel as the wind grows stronger, feeling like it's pulling you apart, just as it did the last time you saw her, but know she's forever in your heart.

Because her soul was beckoned above unforeknown, unseeing, her soul was lured by a softening eye, or by a touch or a sigh, into the labyrinth of another's being.

So, in the sunlight you will feel the warmth of her doting, on the cold dark nights you will find the soul of the arms of her once here being.

In the rain you'll hear the pounding of the tears you've both cried, all the years, but mostly the ones that belonged to you on the day your mother went away.

But just know that she is still around you, and always know that she is with you. Watching over with love that last forever, and waiting for you and her to once again be together.

Breathless, one day you will pose burning with spite, do not worry because your beauty even if so crude, is contrite. This happens all, after so many nights, but it tells us that we are moving with despite.

When you become this despair as your lover , your friend , contrary to your beliefs , I will always be here. So call on me when you're feeling anguished and cruel from her loss, I do and will understand how you came to get here and I will walk with you towards the next journey of your grief. Which is your soul reckoning that your mothers soul is at solemn and peace.
